SABBATH SCHOOLS.

(A.)

Though God brings about whatever He has willed, and has no need of aid from man. He has willed to use human agencies in carrying forward His Divine purposes; and he has willed to use the church as the instrument for disseminating and teaching his Gospel to mankind. He has organized a church, and He has chosen that those who compose that church should labor to promote the interest of the Lord of the churches—the husband of the bride. The members of the church are bound, as obedient children, to labor for and obey their Father; and it is their duty to seek to know His will, and to perform it. No one that is adopted into this family is at liberty to disobey the head and ruler of the family. We are distincily told that all are bound to labor, and the question should be, in what was can the labor be most effectually employed. Not one church says anything at a about Sabbath schools, and in what way can a large number of church member do more, or as much, for their Lord's interests, as in teaching the young the great truths of the Bible? This is a home question and also an individual one. W must each determine for himself what his duty is, and we must each answer to himself the fearful responsibility of neglecting his duty. These are truths, and w know them to be truths, and yet we act as if we believed them to be falsehoods .-We see our children and our neighbor's children growing up in ignorance and sin and yet we have not enough of love for them to labor for their welfare. our own ease more than we love the young, who are the "hope of the world."-Can we expect our churches to do otherwise than languish as long as we thus act We must arouse from this lethargy and tabor to sow the seed: and then the Lord of the harvest will give us an abundant crop W. D. LOVETT, CHAIRMAN.

REPORT ON EDUCATION.

As food is requisite to the sustenance of animal life, and a proper exercise to the development and the health of the body, so does mental nourishment promote the growth of mind, and by a judicious training, and proper exercise of the various parts, or functions of the mind, the inner man if fully developed, and food and exercise are as absolutely necessary for the life of the mind as they are for that of the body.

All parents are prompted by instinct to love, cherish and defend, their offspring. We observe this not only among the most degraded of savages, but in the brite creation. Civilized man recognizes this as a law of our nature, and society would frown upon a violator of this law, and organized society would punish him.

Christian man, taught by Revelation from God, sees in the infant child an immortal being, and the Christian parent feels that God will hold him responsible for the manner in which he shall rear that child. Recognizing these truths we are prompted to inquire what are the obligations we are placed under by the Parental relation, and to what extent we are culpaple, by the neglecting of those duties -All persons believe themselves morally bound to feed, clothe and shelter their children-during infancy to treat them with tenderness and to render the assistance that their feebleness demands-in early youth to provide for their bodily wants, to direct and encourage, or to restrain and reprove, as may be needful. universally acknowledged, and is moreover a legal assumption, that children ought to receive the possession and goods of the parents. In fact no parent questions his duty to provide for the physical comfort and well being of his children, and as far as possible to aid them, when they leave the paternal roof. He labors and saves to accumulate, that his children may enjoy the truit of his toil, after he shall have passed away. But, while exercising a proper care for the tonement, how tew properly regard the necessities, of the tenant-looking merely to the requirements of the physical nature and disregarding the wants of the immortal mind.--'Tis the duty of every parent to give his children the very best education his position in life and circumstances will allow. This is not optionary, but is as much a moral obligation of the parent, as is to attend to their physical wants. As the mind developes, it should be fashioned; when tender it should be properly impressed; and when it wanders, it should be checked, and rightly directed. Early impressions are lasting impressions, and a child must of necessity begin to learn before he begins to speak. Then how careful should the parent be that his example may be worthy of imitation, and that the associates of his children, be not those that will corrupt them A school where immortality or protanity is allowed. should be patronized by no one, and a teacher of corrupt morals and dissolute habits, should be driven from his position, and from society as a moral monstrosity.

By education, is meant, the concention of the entire mind—and to educate correctly it is necessary to teach and direct the mind, to restrain the impulsive, and to urge the slothful to make plain the right, and show what is wrong. And as a true picture, exhibited to the eye will more correctly portray to the mind the lineaments of a person, than any description in language can possibly do; so will example more powerfully impress the young, than all the precept that can be given them apart from example. If a parent neglects to properly direct the infant mind, or fall to give his child such advantages as his circumstances may allow, and that child so neglected, and left to groupe in ignorance becomes a pest to so ciety, and a disgrace to humanity, who should be held responsible for his evil doings, and to whom will God point, as the first cause of these outrages and sing?

If the preceding views be correct, and certainly no thinking man will say they are not, parents as the natural guardians of their children, cannot perform their duty towards them, otherwise, than by giving them the best education their circumstances in life will permit; and any parent, who fails to do this, neglects to do his duty and betrays the most sacred trust confided in man—the proper training and nurturing of the immortal mind; and instead of improving the talents entrusted to his care, he wraps them in ignorance and buries them in darkness. What will his Lord say, when he comes to a reckoning?

A. J. WALDROP, CHAIRMAN.

(C.) REPORT ON DOCUMENTS.

Your committee have carefully reflected upon the subject submitted for their consideration and would make this report :

The Bible is the foundation predicate of all religious truth; and as such recommends itself to every one. It being the Standard, by which all journals, periodicals and books should be tried; we, therefore can sately recommend to this body any work whose truths are predicated upon the "Holy Bible."

Religious newspapers exert a greater influence over the members of churches than any one thing else. They are the most effectual means; as well as the most available; for inculcating universal morality. We suggest to the members of our churches, that it is expedient and wise, that each baptist family should have at least one baptist newspaper.

Most respectfully submitted.
E. B. WALDROP, CHAIRMAN.

(D.) REPORT OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

We, your committee, report the following; That in accordance with the request of your body, we appointed two brethren, viz: Elders J. Grimes and W. T. Rogers, to ride within the bounds of the Association, for which we agreed to give them $1.25 per day. They report to us as fellows: Brother Grimes labored 108 days and beptised 47. Brother W. T. Rogers labored 77 days and baptised 30—during their labors, for the last Associational year. We have received and adopted those reports; believing they discharged their duties. All of which is respectfully submitted.

Z. HAGOOD, CHAIRMAN.
